Motherland

Thomas Wolfe profoundly stated; You Can't Go Home Again. While we can always journey back to our roots, that experience will never be the same because from birth to the time of return, your experiences as a human being have changed. How you interpret or perceive things in life changes because of the life-altering experiences that shape you along the way. I believe that as human beings we are prone to nostalgia, it serves as a protective mechanism to shield us from our unhappier moments and therefore alters the realities of what was and what is.

In returning home to British Columbia, Raphael Mazzucco, is able to look at his past with fresh eyes, while capturing the natural landscapes indelible beauty, he then re-shapes the narrative by adding various layers, though paint, resin and most importantly time. Clearly, it is deeply personal, it should be. This allows the viewer to their own interpretation of the work. In my opinion, this is when art is at its best, because it is at its most honest.
